BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE

Is, without doubt, the best article in the market for dyeing clothes. It will color more water than four times the same weight of indigo, and gives more than any other wash blue in the market.

The only genuine is that put up at ALFRED WIL-

BERGER'S DRUG STORE, No. 223 North Second St.

Philadelphia, Pa. The labels have both Wilt-berger's and Barlow's name on them, all others are counterfeit. For sale by most grocers and druggists.

INGLESIDE:

The residence of H. C. Esq. Charlotte co Va.

Dedicated to Miss A. G. C., by her obliged friend,

REV. JOHN COLLINS M'CARB, D. D.

Come, go with me from dusty marts, and seek the woodlands green, And up the hills, and down the vales, sweep off the dewy sheen; And I will guide you to the home where love and worth reside, And welcome waits each happy guest who visits Ingleside.

O, 'tis a lovely spot; amid a wide-spread sloping lawn, Surrounded with ancestral trees, where birds at early dawn Pour forth in music gushing sweet, their joyous matin lay, To wake from pleasant dreams with song, and usher in the day;

Where lowing herds wind down the hills, and teams are "driven afield," And lending grain o'er lengthened plain, a harvest rich doth yield, And clustering flowers around the porch throughout the year abide, To show that living, gentle heart, still beat at Ingleside.

Warm hearts, warm hands, warm welcome there, with true Virginia zest, Still in that mansion old are found, to greet the honored guest; And happy those who hither turn, and happier who abide Beneath the ancient roof-tree's shade that arches Ingleside.

I've trod its gravel'd walks, and stood beneath those aged trees, And listened to the night-bird's song, kiss'd by the evening breeze; Seen the red sunset, watch'd the stars move on in pompous pride, Then turned to rest, and dream'd sweet dreams at charming Ingleside.

A generous host with whitened brow, a matron calm and fair, Children, and children's children, meet in that old household there, And "Faith, and Hope, and Charity"—these graces, all allied, Still shed a hallowed, living charm around sweet Ingleside.

Back to the city's ceaseless hum, back to the highway's throng I turn, and strive to stifle there the rising tide of song;

My form moves with the struggling waves of the great human tide, But memory seeks the cool, green shades of happy Ingleside.

Friends whom I love, when I am gone, one little thought I claim, A kindly wish—a low-breathed prayer—with whisper of my name;

That Providence, through light or shade, may still the lowliest guide, Of him who was a happy guest at lovely Ingleside. [1862.]

Popular Miscellany.

ONE OF MY TRIALS.

"I wish you would go to the head of the steps, Fannie, and listen to that at the door. I saw a man with a pack under his arm cross the street an instant ago; and if it is another agent, I declare I won't go down to see him."

"It is only the butcher, you say? Well! Biddy can attend to him; and you want to know why I am so determined on the agent question? Ah! my dear, if you did but know what a trial and a torment they have been to me, you wouldn't ask. When we lived in town, I expected to be annoyed by them, but when we came to this little bit of country place I thought I might reasonably expect immunity from that particular form of trial. But it is not the case. Not a bit of it. It seems to me they are possessed of a peculiar faculty for finding me out. Not one comes into the neighborhood but what he or she makes for this house in a bee-line; and, as for getting rid of any of them without having my purse lightened, that is simply an impossibility."

"I declare, it would be amusing, if they were not such a grievous trial, to notice how many different styles of persons are to be found under this one generic name."

"There is, to begin with, the polished agent—so polite, so deferential, that you feel in duty bound to buy the article he offers you, though you know you have not the least use in the world for it, and that it will be consigned to garret or cellar before a week is over;—as was the case with that patent sweeper, which I forewarn would take all the nap off the carpet, and would not sweep the corners, but had to take, because, forsooth, I could not be outdone in courtesy by a travelling agent."

"Very nearly akin to him is the persuasive agent. He attacks you in this style: 'You will find, Madam, that, after using this soap for one week, you would not go back to the old kind upon any account. Now do allow me to put your name down in my book. I am taking orders for it, and will furnish the soap in a few days. Having your name upon my list will be of immense benefit to me in procuring other purchasers for me, and his tone seems to add, and you would not have the heart to deprive me of this advantage.'"

"It is in vain you assure him your servants are perfectly satisfied with the soap you have been furnishing them, and that you have no other use for it. You are coaxed, persuaded and cajoled into giving an order, and you breathe a sigh of relief as he bows himself out."

"Then there is the stolidly pertinacious agent. One of this sort called upon me the year we moved here. He had furniture-polish for sale, and he talked, and talked, and talked in a monotone, until I thought I should go wild."

"That is entirely our look-out," said the agent, and then kept on with a rigmarole, in the midst of which he walked Richard to dinner. I gladly turned my visitor to him, and made my exit; but I laughed in my sleeve, when, ten minutes afterward, he left the house, returning almost instantly with a man bearing the machine."

"It was fully understood between us that we did not bind ourselves to take the machine, even if I should be thoroughly

"I objected first to the price. In fact, I was in a mood to object to anything, for I had been told it was a gentleman; that he had no pack, no satchel, nothing whatever in his hands—I always make it a point to ask these questions when people don't send up their cards, or their names—and I naturally inferred it was a visitor. We were not fairly settled, and I was very busy, and in no condition to see anyone, so had to make a complete toilet. You may imagine my feelings, when, upon going down, I was confronted by a well-dressed stranger, who produced from some mysterious pocket a bottle of polish, which he immediately began recommending in exalted terms."

"It is entirely too much to give for a small bottle like that," I said, when told that the price was one dollar."

"I don't like to tell them that their wares are not worth the money they ask for them. In fact I have a constitutional objection to hurting the feelings
